Dedicated: 1902

To say that Benjamin Butler was a controversial figure is a gross understatement. He was probably the most general most dispensed by the Confederacy.

Butler was appointed Brigadier General in the Massachusetts Militia and was among the first to answer the Presidents call for protection of the Capitol. His actions immediately earned him the rank of Major General and raised the anger of Governor John A. Andrew by raiding independent regiments. A politically connected general, he was seen as a person who could unify the political parties to pursue the common enemy.

He was passionate in his pursuit of the enemy and earned an enduring reputation as commander of New Orleans. Rebels were confined to their homes and when the ladies of New Orleans began to empty bedpans on Union officers he ordered them to be treated no better than the "ladies of the night." His harsh treatment of rebels resulted in Jefferson Davis ordering the Butler "no longer be considered or treated simply as a pubic enemy of the Confederate Sates of America, but as an outlaw and common enemy of mankind, and that, in the event of his capture, the officer in command of the captured force do cause him to be immediately executed by hanging." To the Confederate his was "beast Butler."

After many failures even Ulysses S. Grant found it difficult to remove him from command. After the War he was ejected to Congress and was one of the most outspoken advocates for vengeance. He was among those who claimed that the assignation of Abraham Lincoln was a conspiracy lead by Andrew Johnson and led his impeachment. Ultimately disillusioned with the Republican Party, he became a Democrat and Governor of Massachusetts.

William Dwight, Major General

Title:

Location: Forrest Hills Cemetery, Jamaica Plain, Concentration Ave. and Weiglea Path

Inscription:
William Dwight
Brevet Major General
Died ??? 20, 1880
Remainder not deciphered

History: Dwight commanded the 70th New York Regiment at the outset of the war. He became a brigadier general in 1861 in the Department of the Gulf. After serving as chief of staff for the Department, he commanded divisions in the Army of the Shenandoah and Department of Washington. He was wounded three times at Williamsburg and left on the field as dead. He was taken by the Confederates and was subsequently exchanged. His battles included Bayou Tech, Irish Bend, Red River Campaign, 3rd Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek.

He had difficulties being suspected of cotton speculation and failure to participate in Fisher's Hill to enable him to have his lunch time break. Having lost two sons in the War, it is difficult to believe that these charges were bogus and may have been related to personality issues.
